REITs

Well-Poised To Weather COVID-19 Challenges

- Maintain sector OVERWEIGHT; BUY Manulife US REIT (MUST) and Keppel Pacific Oak US REIT (KORE). Although COVID-19 infections continue to rise sharply in the US, Singapore-listed US office REITs posted robust 1H20 results, with positive operating metrics. Concerns remain on the sustainability of this growth, but our comparison shows all three REITs should be able to weather headwinds – backed by asset diversification, long WALE, and healthy balance sheets. Valuations are cheap, with segmental yields averaging 8.3%, or 280bps higher than office S-REITs.
- 2H20 DPU to remain resilient. All three US office REITs (including Prime US REIT, which is not in our coverage) posted higher 1H20 DPU (Figure 2), as rental escalations, stable occupancy rates, and acquisition contributions more than offset rental deferments and lower carpark income. Rental collection for 2Q20 was also healthy at 92-99%, with minimal abatements (Figure 1). Our discussions with REIT managers confirm that, despite COVID-19, requests for additional rental abatement/deferrals have been minimal, as properties were still operational. Lease expiries for all three REITs also remain low at c.3%. This, together with healthy rental collection, leads us to expect stable DPU for 2H20.
- Well-supported by organic and inorganic growth potential. Gearing for all three US office REITs remains <40% (well below 50% threshold), with Prime US REIT's being the lowest, at 33% and with the longest debt maturity of 5.1 years. With financial market conditions being more favourable now, coupled with depth in US office market and sponsor strength presenting opportunities, the likelihood of acquisitions in 2H20 is high. Note that the majority of office leases in the US have in-built rental escalations of c.2-3%, which provides organic DPU growth.
- No discernible leasing impact of work-from-home (WFH) trend so far. MUST cited recent studies showing that the WFH trend had been quite prevalent even before the COVID-19 pandemic, with 54% of employees in the US having access to such benefits. It also shared that, based on new surveys, only 12% of employees prefer the WFH option vs 10% prior to the pandemic. While leasing activities have slowed down, the latest JLL report indicates that demand is supported by the tech and finance sectors, with larger leases mainly from government, health, and health insurance. In our view, the impact of flexible office space is likely to pare down long-term demand (~5%) but this may be partially offset by de-densification trends and moderate supply, which has been further pushed back.
- Long WALE and below-market rental offer additional comfort. US office REITs' WALE periods are long (c.4-6 years), with MUST having the highest, at 5.7 years. Tenants are also well-diversified with no sector accounting for >30% overall, and no single tenant occupying >10% for all three REITs. Inplace average rentals for REITs are also below rates for KORE (c.10.8% lower), Prime US REIT (c.7.5% lower) and MUST (-19% to +1%, ex-Centerpointe and Michelson, which have above-market rates).
- Key risks are a prolonged economic downturn, collapse of co-working office players, and policy uncertainties from the upcoming US election.
